THE CRAFT OF INTELLIGENCE

by ALLEN DULLES

For decades he refused to be interviewed. He was famous as the most tight-lipped official in Washington. Now—after serving longer than any other man as chief of the Central Intelligence Agency—he has written an engrossing, book-length report on how the intelligence business really works.

Drawing on his own experience as a spy-master, beginning with World War I, Mr. Dulles sets forth the unprettified facts about “the least understood and most misrepresented profession.” The result is an authoritative account of the methods—new and old—which the Great Powers use to guard their own secrets and penetrate their rivals’.
